

Farm Notes.

Animals properly trained need no breaking.

The value of good feed is wonderfully increased by close attention.

Excessive fatness in the male or female is antagonistic to procreation and fecundity.

Good shelter goes a long way towards keeping stock of any kind in good condition.

The greatest profit in feeding sheep for mutton is gained while the animals are young.

There must be a growth and gain in flesh to compensate for labor and the food.

Do not try to do too much and then fail to do anything; do a little and do it well.

There is no profit in keeping a pig or any other animal when there is no gain.

Any loss in production with agriculture and stock raising may have its turn in suffering from overproduction.

Usually the fault in overstocking is not in having too much stock but in not having enough feed.

Steady work of any kind is fatiguing, and a change although it may not be for lighter work may be restful and refreshing to the teams.

If there is one man more than another who has it in his power to live an independent, prosperous life, it is the general farmer.

A horse with long legs and flat sides is not generally an easy keeper. Well rounded ribs, deep flanks and short legs indicate good assimilating powers.

The horse that has the quality of going very fast, fast enough to win among good ones, will command a high price, regardless of the way he goes and with little reference to his power.

To ascertain whether the action is true and straight; stand behind the horse as he walks and feels away from you. You cannot ascertain this important point by standing on the side.

While there is much to be bred, there is much more in the care and management given to the stock to bring out all the good qualities and turn them to profitable account.

Inferior animals are in all the time, while they are on the farm, when they are sold, when they are classified and when they are put on the market.

There is a great difference in the mother qualities of sows, and a breeder finds one which produces uniformly large litters and strong, healthy pigs, while a constant and large flow of her offspring, he should keep breeding purposes as long as she will and she will be the most profitable animal on the farm.

A lamb's cotton fleece is much more worthless than the fleece of an older sheep; and yet it is present in the soft, brilliant quality of the marketable lamb, or make it so highly valuable, both from its quality and length.

The older the animals the longer they will stand the strain and, but younger animals are to be fed for a long period. The chance of disease and loss of fine shape.

HE GOT WHAT HE NEEDED. Nine years ago it looked like time had come. Says Mr. C. T. "I hung on as then. I bought a bottle of Electric and I got it needed—strength. In the grave, but I put it on his urf again. I been well ever since. I guarantee at A. M. Hughes' store. 50 cents.

DEAD BODY

Of Mrs. Minnie Wells Tomlinson
Brought Home from Arkansas.

One of the very saddest scenes of death was witnessed at the home of Henderson Wells, four miles from Louisa last Monday when his daughter Mrs. Minnie Tomlinson, was brought home a corpse from Jeanyland, Ark. She was married only last October to Mr. Hugh Tomlinson, of that State, and left for his home the last of January, where she never had good health.

This dear girl was called to her heavenly home last Friday morning at 10 o'clock. All was done there that loving hands could do, but it was so ordered for God to take her home for the benefit of the sinners who are left behind.

Minnie was married the 3rd of last October, at the age of 17 years and four months old.

For seven weeks before her death she was bedfast, and when death came to her on Friday morning, May 15th, she died just like she was going to sleep.

Grieve not, dear husband and mother, for you will see Minnie again, where you will be with her forever; where God will not call her away from you; for dear Minnie is not gone forever, she is only at rest.

Long before she took sick she told her husband she believed that she was going to die and would not live long, and after she got sick she would ask him if she were to die out there if he would bring her home. And a few moments before she died she told him to tell them all at home "good-bye" and to bring her home.

A moment or two before she died her husband spoke to her, but she could not speak and only looked at him. Then he told her to hold his hand, and she took his hand and held it till she breathed her last.

The sad news reached the home of the bereaved parents last Friday and the sad and prostrated husband arrived with the corpse Monday. The body was laid to rest in the Workman graveyard Tuesday. Rev. Copley, who married the loving couple eight months ago preached her funeral. It was a very sad scene to look upon, as she was so young and beautiful, and called away from her dear companion so soon.

Many friends and all dear relatives were present except one sister, Mrs. Ruth Bobbitt, who was away, and the sad news reached her too late. She arrived the next day after Minnie was buried and is prostrated with grief. But cheer up, and weep not, and meet this dear sister in heaven where you can be with her always.

You have our prayers that you will meet your God and be as good as your dear sister was, who is now rejoicing with the angels above.

The ills peculiar to women, take different forms. Some ladies suffer, every month, from dark rings round their eyes, blotches on their skin and tired feeling. Others suffer agonies of pain, that words can hardly express. Whatever the symptoms, remember there is one medicine that will go beyond mere symptoms, and act on the cause of their troubles, the weakened womanly organs.
